

Collaboration Is an important part of personal success

In the activity of ranking items on level of importance in the event of being stranded far from the base on the moon, the Avg score of individuals was roughly 40.78. The average score of the teams, however, was 26.81. That is an improvement of almost 14 points from working alone to working in a group. This data suggests that when working in a group, hearing the perspectives and reasonings of others is overall beneficial and pushes the team in a direction that is closer to optimal than any teammate would achieve on their own.

This shows that collaboration is very important, if not essential in personal success as the insight of others can bring to light problems that one may not have seen otherwise.

